Overview

The board and participants met to begin defining the White River Conservation District’s “whole under management,” including decision-making structures, resource base, and financial capacity. The session introduced principles of holistic management and emphasized the importance of collaboration, clear communication, and adaptive learning.

Key Discussion Points

1. Decision-Making Structure

- Identified key decision makers: board members, staff, and district manager
- Recognized influence of external entities, including funders and NRCS
- Noted the need for clearer roles, authority, and transparency in decision-making

2. Resource Base

- Defined resources under management:
  - Land and ecosystems
  - Physical assets (buildings, equipment)
  - People (farmers, landowners, community members)
- Emphasized understanding ecological processes, landscape feedback, and energy flow

3. Stakeholders & Impact

- Acknowledged broad range of affected groups:
  - Farmers, landowners, local organizations, and community members
  - Policymakers and external institutions
- Highlighted importance of relationships, equity considerations, and community engagement

4. Financial Resources & Opportunities

- Current resources include:
  - Bank accounts and grant funding
- Explored additional options:
  - Tax levying authority (with challenges)
  - Loans and revenue-generating activities (e.g., tree sales)
  - Municipal appropriations
- Discussed capacity for managing larger grants

5. Holistic Management & Process Feedback

- Introduced holistic management framework and grounding process
- Participants expressed:
  - Appreciation for systems-level thinking
  - Need for clearer goals, pacing, and actionable outcomes
- Emphasized the importance of relationship-building and shared understanding

6. Next Steps

- Continue refining definitions of the district's "whole" in future sessions
- Plan for expanded holistic management training
- Improve communication, logistics, and clarity for upcoming meetings

Adjournment

The meeting concluded with appreciation from participants and a shared commitment to continue developing a more integrated, holistic framework for district management.
